An Excerpt from Thresholds

Elara stood at the edge of the Threshold, her heart pounding in her chest. She had never been this close to the boundary that separated her world from the unknown. The air crackled with anticipation, and she felt a surge of both excitement and trepidation.

With a deep breath, she stepped across the Threshold and into a swirling vortex of light and color. The world around her dissolved, and she felt as though she were suspended in time and space.

When her senses returned, she found herself in a breathtaking meadow. The grass was a vibrant green, and the flowers were blooming in a kaleidoscope of colors. The air was filled with the sound of birdsong, and the scent of wildflowers.

Elara had never seen anything like it. She felt as though she had stumbled into a hidden paradise, a place where all her dreams could come true.
