

Gutenberg the Geek: The Man Who Revolutionized Reading

Johannes Gutenberg was a German goldsmith, inventor, printer, and publisher who is credited with the invention of the printing press in Europe. His invention of movable type printing revolutionized the way books were produced, making them more affordable and accessible to the general public.

Gutenberg was born in Mainz, Germany, around 1400. He was the son of a wealthy goldsmith, and he received a good education. As a young man, Gutenberg worked as a goldsmith and a merchant. He also traveled extensively, and he learned about the latest printing techniques. In 1440, Gutenberg began experimenting with movable type printing. He developed a new type of printing press, and he printed his first book, the Gutenberg Bible, in 1455.
