

Longhauler Poetic Fight for Survival

A Memoir by Sarah Wilson

In March 2020, Sarah Wilson, a poet and mother of two, contracted COVID-19. What started as a mild illness quickly turned into a debilitating nightmare. Sarah was left with a constellation of symptoms that plagued her for months, including fatigue, brain fog, headaches, and shortness of breath.

As Sarah struggled to regain her health, she turned to poetry as a way to express her pain, frustration, and hope. Her poems, which she shared on social media, resonated with thousands of other longhaulers who were also struggling to come to terms with their illness.
