Bolaji Bahun was a visionary. He saw a world where everyone had access to the nutrients they needed to live a healthy life. And he was determined to make that world a reality.

Bahun was born in Nigeria in 1954. He grew up in a poor family, and he often went hungry. As a child, he saw firsthand the devastating effects of malnutrition. He knew that something had to be done to end this suffering.

Bahun went on to study medicine at the University of Ibadan. After graduating, he worked as a doctor in rural Nigeria. He saw that malnutrition was a major problem in his country. Children were dying from diseases that could have been prevented with proper nutrition.

Bahun decided to dedicate his life to fighting malnutrition. He founded the Micronutrient Initiative in 1993. The Micronutrient Initiative is a non-profit organization that works to improve the nutritional status of people around the world.

The Micronutrient Initiative's work has saved millions of lives. The organization has helped to reduce the number of children who die from malnutrition by 50%. It has also helped to improve the health of countless others.

Bahun is a true visionary. He has dedicated his life to making the world a better place. His work has saved millions of lives and improved the health of countless others. He is an inspiration to us all.
