In Mixed Race Daughter And The Mother Who Gave Her Away, author Kimberly Seals Allers tells the story of her search for her identity and her relationship with the mother who gave her away. Allers was born to a white mother and a black father, and she was adopted by a white family. She grew up feeling like she didn't belong in either world, and she struggled to find her place in society.

As an adult, Allers embarked on a journey to find her birth mother. She eventually found her, but their reunion was not what she had hoped for. Her mother was a troubled woman who had struggled with addiction and poverty. Allers was able to forgive her mother, but she also came to understand that she would never have the relationship with her that she had always longed for.
